

The Life Cycle Of The Very Hungry Caterpillar

Diane Henderson

I used the large, blank circle template, which can be used to "design your own head", to cut 2 shades of green scrapbook paper circles out, then glued the picture "segments" in an ABAB pattern.

I've included a full-color template so you can quickly & easily make a sample to share, as well as a black line version for your kiddos.

I glued the extra butterfly on top for that 3D finishing touch.

Wiggle eyes, a tiny white pom pom for the egg, as well as a pipe cleaner bent into a V, then taped to the back of the top of the caterpillar's head for antennae, add more "wow" to the finished project.

Students use this visual to retell Eric Carle's story, "The Very Hungry Caterpillar", while explaining the life cycle of a butterfly.

This cute clip art by trioriginals.

This is the "color, cut & glue" version, with more realistic clip art.
I also used the "cut & glue" caterpillar head patterns, to make this caterpillar look more like Eric Carle's.

Run off circles on a variety of colors of construction paper. Students choose what color they want their caterpillar to be. They trace and write the life cycle words, and glue the appropriate picture underneath. Students cut out their circles and then glue them in chronological order to the head of their caterpillar.
